could store their goods feeling that they were safe; and an oil mill which would consume all the cotton seed that are for sale in the country. In that way the people who sell their seed would probably receive a larger price for their produce, because it stands to reason, if others can buy the seed and pay the freight on them to their place of business and make money; an oil mill here, could pay a larger price and realize equally as large profits, as there would be no transportation charges to pay. This is a matter that the business men of Batesburg should consider and weigh well; because it concerns the prosperity of their town; and the progress of a town is the progress of its people.

A new view of the possibilities of newspaper advertising is afforded in Burlington, Vermont, where "every local banking institution advertises with as much spirit and enterprise as a department store." One of these banks, among the oldest and most conservative in the State, changes its advertisements every day, and besides telling what it can do for people, gives good advice which leads them to save money. This thing would not be done up in Vermont if it did not pay, so the necessary inference is that it does pay. There are many other business establishments, now unknown to newspaper advertising columns, which would be benefited by a liberal use of printers' ink.—The State.

Several of the Batesburg merchants, have got to learn the value of printers' ink. That frequent and extensive use as a profitable investment, those who have tried it can testify. One of our merchants had never advertised before. The Advocate was established, told us that the first issue paid for a year's ad. Others should try the experiment.

We have heard from various sources that money is being loaned in this city on short time at five, six and eight hundred per cent. We have even heard of cases where the rate was three or four thousand per cent. Our busy law does not seem to operate in these cases.—The Lantern.

This is a matter for the consideration of our wise legislators, who will do a good service for their state, if they will put a stop to such oppressions. Borrowing money on such conditions is no accommodation, neither can it be classed as a mutual benefit, but rather an imposition of a grave character.

We watch with keen interest the growth of our capital city. And we greet with plea its latest advancements. Columbia has reached the period in her growth that she can no longer do without a recorder and should if possible have a vice-commissioner. From the daily papers we learn that both of these useful powers are going to be asked for, at the next session of the Legislature. It is our earnest desire that they will be granted, and no doubt they will be.

We must win our way, by struggles, to all noble achievements. The tree that grows where storms sweep, is sterner and grander than the one that grows in the quiet vale.

The other day we urged the Chester Lantern, in the presentation of its work of good roads, to induce some of its progressive citizens to club in and give the country people an object-lesson in the comfort and value of such highways by building a mile of really first-class road out of Chester. The lantern now informs us that it has done this very thing, and adds: "It is true that so far as an object-lesson is concerned, we already have that. The city of Chester has several miles of the best macadam streets to be found anywhere. But we believe the cause of good roads would be materially advanced if every highway leading into the city was macadamized for even one mile outside the incorporated limits." The effect upon the farmers of an object-lesson in good roads will be much greater than the spectacle of good streets. Cities are expected to have good streets and they are looked upon by country people as a matter of course. A sample of good roads in a county like Chester would be novel and therefore impressive. If the roads of Chester county are still what they were a few years ago, when we made a trip across country with the buggy wheels frequently sinking to the hub in clay-holes, we can well understand the persistence of our contemporary in advocating their reform, for no roads can need it more.—The State.

Drawing The Line On Jackson.
 A Good Story is told in Missouri at the expense of its one famous governor, Claiborne F. Jackson.
 Before he solved the enigma of love, he had married five sisters—in reasonable lapse of consecutive years. After one had been lost and appropriately mourned he espoused another, and he kept his courting within a narrow circle of his own relatives, for he rather liked the family.
 The antiquated father of these girls was almost deaf, and when the governor went to this antiquarian to ask for his surviving daughter, the following conversation ensued:
 "I want Lizzie!"
 "Eh?"
 "I want you to let me have Elizabeth!"
 "Oh, you want Lizzie, do you, what for?"
 "For my wife!"
 "For life?"
 "I want—to marry—her!"
 "Oh, yes! Just so. I fear you boy."
 "I'm precious glad you do," muttered the governor.
 "Well," slowly responded the veteran, "you needn't bother as that the whole neighborhood knows it! Yer can have her. You've got em all now my lad, but for goodness' sake if anything happens to that 'ere poor misguided gal, don't come and ask me for the old woman!"
 Jackson solemnly promised that he never would.—The Bits.

Mason and Dixon's Line.
 We were at any time told that the famous Mason and Dixon line was somewhat imaginary, being intended merely to designate the division between the north and south. The states of Maryland and Pennsylvania, however, view the matter differently, having recently appropriated the one $5,000 and the other $7,000 to locate the old boundary posts and stones, many of which they say, have been stolen by vandals and hunters. Their places will be taken by new cast iron markers.—Spit n'burg Journal.

He Loves Her Though She Is Dead.
 As I sat in my lonely cottage on the mountain side, I watched the sun as it approached the peak behind which it was soon to hide its glowing light. As I sat thus meditating there came to me visions of my youthful days. I beheld her again sitting at my feet silently, as if meditating on the beauty of the scenery around about us. Then as my mind went to follow up a train of thought that suggested itself, I again saw that awed sight, there came to my mind eye visions of that fatal day, when, as I thought then, Heaven itself had forsaken me in taking away my best beloved companion. As these visions flashed before mine eyes, in spite of a manly determination, I wept bitterly tears for her who had departed and vainly did I stretch forth my hands as if in humble supplication for the return of the faithful companion of my early manhood.
 While in this agony of heart, scarcely knowing what I did, I gathered up my hat and hastened out in spite of the approaching darkness and instinctively I pushed my head and directed my footsteps toward that lonely spot where her earthly remains had been deposited. When I reached that hallowed ground I sat down by that sacred mound of earth as if communing with the spirit of my departed one.
